Statement of Philosophy

SafePlace is a crisis intervention and social change organization that strives to end domestic and sexual violence and to end the systems of oppression that perpetuate it. Oppression is defined as the institutionalized socially condoned mistreatment of the members of one group by another group.

Freedom from violence and fear is a basic human right. We oppose the use of violence as a means of control over others. We support equality in relationships and the concept of individuals assuming power over their own lives. We view every interaction as an opportunity to empower and educate individuals about their right to be free of violence. If change is to occur, it must be made on an individual level as well as on an institutional level. We practice social change internally by utilizing an egalitarian inclusive organizational model.

We believe that all people have the right to make their own decisions regarding sexual and reproductive matters, finances, education, religion, and employment. Each person is wonderfully unique. Our strengths come in many forms and we contribute in different ways. Only by honoring our differences and appreciating our various perspectives can we find harmony.
